So your practice
has gone digital.

Now what?

Digital accounting technology starts with the simple things. Uploading client documents via smartphone capture. Storing them in the cloud for security and anytime access. Auto-generating monthly reports to help clients keep on top of their business finances.

These are cornerstones of any modern accounting practice – but they're just the tip of the iceberg.

The Big Picture

4 The number of years the COVID-19 pandemic has sped up digitisation for consumers and businesses.

58% The percentage of global transactions that are now digital, almost tripling in just two years.¹

Your clients are now living their lives in the digital world. Whether they have adopted digital processes within their business yet or not, they are better equipped to both adapt to new technologies and appreciate their worth. This is no different when it comes to business accounting.

The question is no longer about your firm going digital - that shift has already begun. The question is, with digital technology so readily available, now what? Unlocking greater value for your clients, saving your firm even more time (and money), and distributing resources effectively - these are the areas you need to build towards to become truly digital.

Your day-to-day

Does this sound familiar?

Waiting for clients to post, deliver or scan documents

Too much paper from clients, and missing or misplaced items

Time wasted if you can "wait"

Unable to schedule bookkeeping tasks - you never know when the info will be available

Take control of your practice

- Streamline your processes. Think about technology in a strategic way. If it doesn't add value for you or your clients, it's a distraction.
- Build a scalable workflow. Get tasks completed when you want and in line with your long-term objectives. A strong foundation for your firm's future.
- Faster compensation. Reduce the time you spend waiting for remuneration, and instead focus your resources on the clients that need it.
